

ARTEMIS BARN

250-year-old Artemis Barn was lovingly restored from its derelict condition and gracefully refurbished into a family home. Nestled within a strict conservation area in the Peak District National Park, its location and age, meant planning officers provided the necessary guidance to ensure each element of the refurbishment protected this historic property.

Sitting alongside exposed steel, rough-sawn timber and stone walls, the linked Conservation Rooflights provide a bridge between the original course textures and that of the newly plastered white walls, whilst filling the large open triple-height living areas, and surrounding rooms with bright, natural light.

THE ROOFLIGHT CO.
COTSWOLDS

The classic sizes of The Original Conservation Rooflight range can be linked together to create a run of natural light. Artemis Barn saw the installation of linked Conservation Rooflights positioned either side of the ridge of the roof to allow a showering of natural light to enter into this open plan living space.
